I. Ladies & Gentlemen of the Jury: Greatest Closing Arguments...

Preface > Overview

Anyone who's ever watched Perry Mason knows that the closing argument is a very important part of a big legal case. The closing argument is the "game point" of law; the time when lawyers pull out all the stops on the ceiling and the litigating. Michael S. Lief and his coauthors have collected the closing arguments from 10 noteworthy cases in this volume, introducing each speech with background information on the trial and commentary on the lawyer's technique. In these pages, reader get a front-row seat to some of the most riveting trials in this century, including the Charles Manson murder trial, Karen Silkwood's wrongful-death suit, and the trial of the Chicago Seven.

Because the authors chose to include all the courtroom interruptions in the transcript, the Manson summation makes for especially lively reading. Manson and his codefendants repeatedly spoke out of turn during prosecutor Vincent Bugliosi's statement, saying things like "You are going to be eaten up by your own lie" and "Even if I have never been in the Gotham Bank!" Bugliosi's speech is among the most eloquent in the collection, which is why it is so stunning when one of the defendants provokes him, so much that he loses his cool and calls her a name that rhymes with rich.

I. Ladies & Gentlemen of the Jury: Greatest Closing Arguments in Modern Law

Preface > Overview

Anyone who's ever watched Perry Mason knows that the closing argument is a very important part of a big legal case. The lawyers pull out all the stops on the closing and the litigating. Michael S. Lief and his coauthors have collected the closing arguments from 10 noteworthy cases in this volume, introducing each speech with background information on the trial and commentary on the lawyer's technique. In these pages, reader get front-row seats to some of the most riveting trials in this century, including the Charles Manson murder trial, Karen Silkwood's wrongful-death suit, and the trial of the Chicago Seven.

Because the authors chose to include all the courtroom interruptions in the transcript, the Manson summation makes for especially lively reading. Manson and his codefendants repeatedly spoke out of turn during prosecutor Vincent Bugliosi's statement, saying things like "You are going to be eaten up by your own lie" and "Even if I have never been in the Gotham Bank!" Bugliosi's speech is among the most eloquent in the collection, which is why it is so stunning when one of the defendants provokes him so much that he loses his cool and calls her a name that rhymes with rich.

ready is. feelings about the picture's meanings flashed quickly now into his mind, and he wanted to toss them out for his mentor's consideration.

Frustrated, he could not formulate these thoughts into a single observation. The concepts were all there, he realized, as they were here now. The problems, the dilemmas. The damnable code of the West. And the solution. The gun.

Quinn knew now that the movie was, to Matt, more than just a story of the West. But there was a relevance that somehow eluded his reasoning.

"It's about killing, isn't it?" he blurted out dissatisfied with the statement even before he'd completed the sentence.

Matt nodded. "Yeah, I guess..." his voice trailed off.

They stood in the hallway facing each other in silence. The moment was awkward.

"Get some sleep," Matt finally asserted. "It may be a long day tomorrow, and you'll need it."

"Matt," David called, halfway through his doorway. "What's happening?"

Matt looked down at the floor, and then directly back at Quinn.

"Don't know yet," he said. "Be patient, we'll know soon enough. Perhaps tomorrow." He paused again, lowering his head, then looking up quickly in a departing gesture. "Good night, son."

This final exchange weighed heavier on Quinn's mind than anything he had seen or heard this evening.

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

Quinn rode to the Pentagon in the back seat. The two faces up front were familiar. The vehicle was different. This time it was a battleship gray sedan. He intended to examine the tags, but forgot to do so on both entry and egress.

It was the front seat passenger who alighted and walked with David into the bowels of the Pentagon complex. His night's sleep had been anything but restful. With his mind still foggy he was more than happy to have this escort. The man walked in silence at a fast pace, which David appreciated. It helped clear his brain.

Matt had dragged him out of his restless sleep by phone at 6:30, sounding as if he had been awake for hours. The only instructions David remembered were that they would meet in Harvey's office at 8:30.

It seemed they had walked for miles when the escort stopped abruptly outside an unmarked door.

"Go right in, sir," he said crisply, opening the door in a similar manner.

Quinn passed through, and the door closed behind him. The escort did not follow.

The room was bright and cold. A secretary sat typing at her desk.
